Recruitment Funnel Performance Review - Multi-Property Hospitality Recruitment (Jan–Jun 2026)

If I were hired into this role, here are three things I would build about how recruitment is tracked and run.

Analytics Capability - Performance Dashboard

- A dashboard that automatically compares recruiter performance across every combination of source, department, and hiring manager not just one dimension at a time.
- In this analysis, a real issue was found where one recruiter performed well overall, but poorly on one specific sourcing channel. This pattern only showed up after manually checking the data one combination at a time. A system that checks every combination on its own would catch this kind of issue much faster, without needing someone to go looking for it.
- Each week, recruiter's performance across each source, department, and hiring manager combination will be compared against the overall average. Any combination that falls below normal would be flagged for review, instead of waiting for to be noticed.

Automation Opportunity - Data Quality Check

- A script that checks the data every time it is updated, and flags any column that has values it should not have.
- In this analysis, four columns contained numbers for candidates who should not have had any values, for example, a "days to join" value for candidates who never actually joined. This was found and corrected manually.
- Before any report or dashboard runs, the system would check each column against a rule, for example, "days to join" should have a value if the candidate actually joined. If a column breaks the rule, it gets flagged.

3. AI Use Case - WhatsApp Check Before the Interview

- A simple WhatsApp chat that asks a candidate a few basic questions right after they apply, before a recruiter reviews their profile.
- The biggest drop in this analysis happens after the interview stage, many candidates are interviewed but do not get an offer. Asking a few questions earlier could reduce the number of interviews that do not lead anywhere, saving recruiter and hiring manager time.
- Once a candidate applies, they would receive 3–4 quick questions over WhatsApp. Based on their answers, they would be marked as ready for interview, needs a closer look, or not a fit before a recruiter spends time on them.
